

Alexandria Gazette.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 26.

MR. LANGTRY REFUSES A DIVORCE.—Mrs. Langtry's stay in London was very brief. She returned on Tuesday to Paris. It is said that her attempt at negotiations for divorce proceedings with her husband were an utter failure. A meeting between the solicitors in the case and two of the parties most interested was arranged, but Mr. Langtry was not there. He absolutely refused to see or to talk with his wife on the subject, and gave her to understand that a recommencement of divorce proceedings would meet with the same conduct on his part as before. One of Mr. Langtry's friends indignantly denies that it is a question of money with him. He says: "Mr. Langtry is earning a good living and is not in need of money, and will certainly not consent to any arrangement to hand his wife over to another man." Mrs. Langtry has returned to Paris very much disheartened. She is living in a quiet place and drives in the most retired avenues of the Bois every day with Mr. Gebhard.

GAMBLING IN VIRGINIA.—George Alfred Townsend says that the particular vice of Virginia is gambling, and he relates this incident of his recent tour through the State: "When I returned from Leesburg I heard two men talking behind me for the space of two hours, and their whole conversation was descriptive of games of cards held the night before—how one man had held two pairs and another had a full, &c. Into this game these grown up men of respectable appearance—men probably fifty years of age—went with a minutiae and a relish that was astonishing." At the Virginia villages, he says, you see the young men ride up at about 11 o'clock and hitch their horses. They enter the groceries in the back part of which, behind a sheet, are tables for card playing. There they drink bad whisky and win each other's money till about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when they mount their horses and ride home.
